

The Bedrock of God's Radical Holiness

The holiness of God stands at the very heart of biblical theology. It is a foundational attribute that shapes our understanding of who God is and how He relates to His creation.

The Scriptures repeatedly affirm that God is holy, set apart from all sin and moral imperfection. This divine purity is not merely an abstract quality but a living reality that demands reverence, worship, and obedience from His people.

In a world marred by sin and moral confusion, the holiness of God calls believers to a higher standard of living. It is both a comfort and a challenge: comfort in knowing that God's nature is perfect and unchanging, and a challenge in that we are called to reflect His holiness in our daily lives. This podcast will explore the biblical doctrine of God's holiness, its implications for our sanctification, and the practical outworking of holiness in the believer's walk.

We will examine key passages from the King James Version that reveal the multifaceted nature of holiness, including God's transcendence, His moral purity, and His call for His people to be holy as He is holy (Leviticus 11:44; 1 Peter 1:16). Through this exploration, may we gain a more profound reverence for God and a renewed commitment to live lives pleasing unto Him.
