

Unveiling Christ in Prophetic Shadows

Biblical prophecy stands as one of the most profound and awe-inspiring elements of Scripture. It reveals God's sovereign plan unfolding through history, offering both immediate and ultimate fulfillment. Far from being mere predictions, prophecy in the Bible serves as a divine testimony to God's unchanging purpose and faithfulness to His covenant promises.

In this podcast, we will explore the nature of biblical prophecy, its typological dimensions, and its eschatological significance. We will examine how prophecy functions both as a message to God's people in their historical context and as a window into the future consummation of all things in Christ.

Our approach will maintain a high view of Scripture, affirming the inspiration and authority of the prophetic word as recorded in the King James Version. We will also seek to understand prophecy soberly and pastorally, avoiding sensationalism and focusing on the rich theological truths that sustain the believer's hope.
